THE Queensland government is preparing to sell a prime 3.4 hectare site in the heart of the Gold Coast's freshly designated central business district, as investor confidence in the city's development market increases.

Demolition is under way at Southport's former public hospital site, a triangular plot bordering arterials Queen and Nerang streets.

The Newman government wants to transform it into a medium-density zone under the recently legislated Southport Priority Development Area and has subdivided the site into three major sectors, which could be sold as one lot.

It is understood Savills has been appointed to run expressions of interest for the major site, which is set to be developed into a city hub including office, shops, restaurants and apartments.

Many of the 20 buildings on the former hospital site contain asbestos and are being torn down by Rosenlund Contractors.

The Queensland government expects a sale to be finalised by the end of the year, with industry saying it could bring up to $30 million.

Local councillor Dawn Crichlow said the site was well-serviced and perfect for commercial development.

The old site was no longer required when the $1.7 billion Gold Coast University Hospital, near Griffith University in the city's west, was opened last year.

Meanwhile, an Australian group is understood to be undertaking due diligence for the sale of a large development site on the corner of Bermuda Road and Nerang Broadbeach Road, Mermaid Waters, which is owned by The Scheinberg Group.

The price tag has been speculated at up to $80m.

The 40ha site, 3km inland from coastal Broadbeach, has development approvals for residential units, commercial and retail. It is being marketed by Colliers' Darrell Irwin, who did not return calls from The Australian.

Development sales on the Gold Coast are increasing amid an influx of international investment, particularly from Singapore and China.

A controversial proposal to build a $7.5bn integrated casino resort on Wavebreak Island is being closely watched. Last month, the Queensland government tightened restrictions for ASF Consortium's bid for a gaming licence, ruling out development on public land at The Spit and Doug Jennings Park.
