2302 GMT [Dow Jones] Now that it has sold its main Australian assets, the focus for Karoon Gas (KAR.AU) turns to Brazil, where UBS hopes the coming Kangaroo-2 well will provide a "share price bounce" when it's drilled between September and December. Karoon and joint venture partner Pacific Rubiales (PRE.T) have already had some success with the Kangaroo-1 and Kangaroo West wells and a further oil discovery would help prove up the quality of the resource. Although the drilling program is risky, UBS notes Karoon's US$600 million sale of Australian assets to Origin (ORG.AU) provides A$2.44/share of cash backing, offering considerable protection if well results disappoint. The shares could also benefit from a further sell-down of Karoon's stake in the promising Brazilian assets, UBS says, applying a buy recommendation and A$5.50 price target vs. Karoon's last trade of A$3.74. 2255 GMT [Dow Jones] The realignment of Johnson Controls' building efficiency business unit includes a management shakeup as part of separating the unit's service and HVAC products businesses. Dave Myers, president of the building unit, resigned after 20 years with JCI. He has been replaced by Bill Jackson, who worked in JCI's automotive business after joining the company in 2011. Trent Nevill will continue as vice president and general manager in charge of building efficiency's service business, which accounted for 45% of building efficiency's $3.9 billion of revenue in 2013. Building efficiency has become a more important business to JCI as the company scales back its automotive business in search of better margins and a higher stock price. JCI ended down 1.2% at $46.02. (robert.tita@wsj.com)

2252 GMT [Dow Jones] Johnson Controls JCI is splitting the service and products businesses of its building-efficiency unit, a move that JCI hopes will give the businesses more room to expand and focus on customers. "I think it's going to make us a better company," says CEO Alex Molinaroli in an interview. "Both of these businesses are very important to our future," he says. The service business has 120 branches that install, repair and maintain heating and air conditioning systems in commercial buildings. The products side of the buildings business builds York-brand HVAC equipment and recently entered into a joint venture with Hitachi for variable refrigerant technology. JCI ended down 1.2% at $46.02. (robert.tita@wsj.com)

2252 GMT [Dow Jones] Australia's central bank will publish minutes of its September policy meeting at 0130 GMT. ANZ says in a research note it expects a more optimistic message on the domestic economy to be conveyed, but is also looking to see if the level of concern among policy makers about China's property market is on the rise. The Australian dollar has had its biggest fall against the U.S. dollar in more than a year in the last week in part due to uncertainty about China. (james.glynn@wsj.com; Twitter @JamesGlynnWSJ)

18:07 EDT - Shares of Brazilian steelmaker Companhia Siderurgica Nacional (CSNA3.BR) surge on news that a steel plant the company had reportedly hoped to buy in Kentucky will be sold to US steelmaker Nucor (NUE) for $770M. CSN has been in the market to buy US steel assets for more than a year but has repeatedly come up short. In July the company lost a bid for the US operations of Russian steelmaker Severstal, while earlier this year Germany's ThyssenKrupp agreed to sell an Alabama mill to ArcelorMittal and Nippon Steel. CSN shares gain 2.9% today to close at BRL9.67. (paul.kiernan@wsj.com)

17:59 EDT - Central-bank autonomy is a subject that shows up in Brazil's political debate every now and then, but a tight presidential campaign has given the subject a higher profile. As opposition candidate Marina Silva shot up on the polls to challenge incumbent Dilma Rousseff, a proposal for central-bank autonomy buried on Silva's government program was picked up by Rousseff's camp, who says the move was tantamount to empowering bankers and taking food out of the working family's table. Former central-bank President Gustavo Franco wrote in an op-ed piece for O Globo newspaper Sunday, about the debate: "In two weeks, the evolution of Brazil's monetary institutions regressed a decade or more." (paulo.trevisani@wsj.com; @ptrevisani)

17:56 EDT - Nucor's (NUE) purchase of Ghent, Kentucky-based Gallatin Steel from Gerdau (GGB) and ArcelorMittal (MT) for $770M will add around 20c per share on a cash basis to NUE's 2015 earnings, KeyBanc says. "We see operating income of $95 million," excluding purchase price accounting adjustments, the firm writes. Before the announcement, Gallatin was generating roughly $140M-$150M annually in Ebitda, before interest, taxes, depreciation and amortization, Keybanc estimates. (john.miller@wsj.com)

17:49 EDT - Brazil's crude steel production fell to 2.9M metric tons in August, down 1.4% from a year earlier, the Brazilian Steel Institute said today. Exports rose slightly, but domestic consumption tumbled 17% year-on-year to 2M tons. Brazil's steel sector is stuck between a rock and a hard place, with a recession hurting the domestic market and huge oversupply in the international market keeping a lid on exports. (paul.kiernan@wsj.com)

17:40 EDT - It might soon be illegal for businesses to keep pay under wraps. The US Department of Labor announces a proposed rule that would ban federal contractors from having pay-secrecy policies. Under the proposal, federal contractors and subcontractors wouldn't be able to fire or discriminate against employees or applicants for discussing, disclosing or inquiring about their pay or that of other workers. Rules for federal contractors often influence policy for other employers because federal contractors comprise such a large number. The rule, published in the September 17 Federal Register, is open for public comment for 90 days. (rachel.silverman@wsj.com)

17:37 EDT - President Kirchner's 2015 budget suggest Argentines are in for a dose of fiscal austerity, with the projected 13.2% rise in spending below the government's 14.5% inflation forecast. That inflation number looks farfetched compared to the 40% estimates annual inflation today, and the idea that government spending would actually contract in real terms during an election year borders on the fantastical. Argentina watchers know that Kirchner budgets grossly underestimate tax revenue and spending so the president can spend the resulting budget-busting windfall as she sees fit thanks to emergency powers granted by Congress. Spending financed by money printing has been a major contributor to inflation the last five years in the absence of other financing sources. Without foreign borrowings in 2015, the central bank's printing press will likely be in high demand. (ken.parks@wsj.com)

17:37 EDT - At the end of the month, insurance companies will have to begin dumping 115,000 people who signed up for health plans through the troubled HealthCare.gov site, the Obama administration said today, because those people missed a deadline to confirm they are legally residing in the US. It's likely to be unwelcome additional work for insurers as they ready for the next sign-up period starting this November. The administration also said it would move to cut off tax credits that offset the cost of premiums for around 279,000 people whose income the government can't verify if those people don't respond to a Sept. 30 deadline to send in more information. (louise.radnofsky@wsj.com; @louiseradnofsky)

17:32 EDT - The Labor Department today awarded $10M in grants to 19 states for creating or improving programs to detect misclassified workers, an action that could prove costly for small firms operating on tight margins. "States will have more funding to conduct audits, and even if you've properly classified all of your workers, you will still be put through the cost of defending yourself in the form of professional fees and business interruption," says New York attorney David Lagasse. Converting contractors into staffers to avoid possible penalties can also raises expenses, he adds, due to taxes, social security and other hiring-related costs.
