Mining magnate Andrew Forrest says China doesn't need to buy Australian farms to secure food supply when it can partner with the nation's farmers to help boost production.

TD

Mr Forrest, who earlier this year bought Western Australia's biggest beef processor Harvey Beef, will meet representatives from some of China's biggest food producers in Canberra on Saturday, to secure an agreement he hopes will significantly stimulate agricultural production.

The meeting would be the first attended by both Chinese and Australian participants of Mr Forrest's ASA 100, which he established earlier this year to strengthen agricultural business between the two nations.

The agreement is expected to be formally signed by Chinese President Xi Jinping and Prime Minister Tony Abbott on Monday.

"We have laid out to China what we need to become a prosperous, thriving agricultural industry, which can multiply our supply [to them]," Mr Forrest told The Australian Financial Review. Free-trade agreement with China

The comments from the Fortescue chairman come on the cusp of a free-trade agreement with China.

The agreement is expected to cover services, agriculture and some aspects of foreign investment. It will allow additions for disputed issues in later years.

Australia is also working to secure a deal to export up to 1 million live cattle a year to China, a figure that was questioned by some in the sector given total exports last year were 1.1 million.

Mr Forrest believes by building relationships with China and improving Australia's food branding, demand could grow and offer farmers a significant market to offset the domestic market power of Coles and Woolworths.

"They [retailers] reduce the margins of the grower so severely that they become dangerously unsustainable," he said. "So you bring in a China. You make Australia to China the safest most attractive place to import your food from." Mr Forrest said he is underinvested in agriculture and is seeking to grow his assets, which include Pilbara cattle stations. Competition growing for agricultural assets

He paid $40 million for Harvey Beef in May, which is WA's only accredited exporter to China.

Mr Forrest's Minderoo has eyed Lactanz Dairies and the Brownes dairy plant, both in WA.

There is growing competition for agricultural assets.

Fellow miner Gina Rinehart's Hope Dairies is reportedly planning a $500 million investment to supply infant formula to China and is looking to acquire about 5000 hectares of farmland in Queensland.

Key points

Agreement sought with China to stimulate agricultural production.

Increased demand could offset the pressure on farmers from retailers.
