Chinese-backed developer Aqualand has paid $27 million to private developer Anka Group for an apartment and shopping centre development at Lindfield train station on Sydney's upper north shore.

The 3399-square-metre site, with DA approval for more than 100 apartments and a ground floor retail complex, quietly changed hands in the first quarter of the year in an off-market deal.

Aqualand has in recent weeks started spruiking the development at 23-27 Lindfield Avenue on its website of residential developments as having approval for 112 apartments and some 2379 square metres of retail space. The site, sitting opposite the railway station in the well-heeled suburb of Lindfield, will form an integral part of a broader town centre upgrade improving retail amenities and the village atmosphere in the area.

"According to the plan, the supermarket IGA will station in the property after building completion," the group added on the property description.

The sale comes as a surprise given that vendor Anka is an established developer with a number of residential projects in the pipeline and recently completed.

Headed by the mother and son team of Vera and Alex Boyarsky, Anka most recently gained notoriety through its $200 million Union at Balmain residential development in Rozelle, in Sydney's inner west, which achieved a 100 per cent sales rate within weeks of launching in early 2013.

Before the Aqualand sale, Anka had enlisted the help of leading architects Crone Partners on a concept plan for the mixed-use development.

The site sale to Aqualand has also created interest in the rest of Anka's portfolio, which includes sought-after sites in Kings Cross and other residential locations close to transport nodes throughout the city.

A company spokesperson confirmed the sale, but declined to comment further on the group's development strategy. Company heads Vera and Alex Boyarsky were unable for comment.

For Aqualand, the transaction adds to a fast-growing portfolio that includes residential development sites in Melrose Hill in Sydney, and in Perth.

The group paid $170 million in September for the former CSIRO headquarters in North Ryde from Challenger Life Company, as revealed by The Australian Financial Review.

Aqualand has a pipeline of more than 1200 units in Australia and has spent more than $330 million in the last two months on real estate.

In mid-August Aqualand paid about $135 million for a 4.85 hectare residential development site in Sydney's north-west, in a deal brokered by Colliers. The site, zoned for mixed-use development, could yield up to 1200 units.
